Numb. 391.

THE Pennſylvania GAZETTE.

Containing the freſheſt Advices Foreign and Domeſtick.

From May 27. to June 3. 1736.

— Homo certe mirabilis, quippe qui quum in Terra, peregrina tam procul ab domo ingenti conſenſu ſummum Imperium per multos annos tenuerit. Multitudinem mixtam ex colluvione omnium Gentium, quibus non Lex, non Mos, non Lingua communis, alius Habitus, alia Veſtis, alij Ritus, alia Sacra, alij prope Dij, ita quodam uno vinculo copulaverit, ut ex tam variis diverſis Gentibus Reſpublica bene conſtituta exſtiterit. Liv.

AS this Paper was undertaken with no other View, but to recommend the Cauſe of Liberty; and as we cannot be ſaid to enjoy that valuable Bleſſing, while our Repreſentatives are regarded as Cyphers, I thought it no unſeaſonable Enquiry, whether any Perſon, according to the Fundamentals of the Engliſh Conſtitution, might lawfully take upon him to thwart the Reſolutions of the collected Wiſdom of a People.

I may preſume the Arguments I offered on that Subject are ſound and concluſive, ſince none have undertaken to ſhew their Falſity, but by threatening the Author in a foreign Language and calling him Names in their own.

That Truth might operate in it's full Force, it ſeemed neceſſary to keep my ſelf concealed, having obſerved a prevailing Humour with many, to form their Judgments on the perſonal Character of a Writer.

This Conduct produced ſeveral impertinent Conjectures concerning the Author, altogether as falſe as they were ridiculous. The Party ſent out to make Diſcoveries, having ranged about to no Purpoſe; on their Return, vented their Malice on a Gentleman in no wiſe allyed to the Enemy they were in queſt of.

Tho' it lies not within the Compaſs of my original Deſign, yet it may not be amiſs to ſtep a little out of my Road, to expoſtulate with theſe Partizans, who think every Man's Reputation, who ſtands up for the Rights and Privileges of his Country, to be lawful Plunder.

I find the aforeſaid Gentleman is become the Object of their Reſentment, becauſe he rather choſe to abandon their Intereſt, than betray the Truſt repoſed in him by his Conſtituents. This very Circumſtance alledged againſt him as an unpardonable Crime, ought to be an Argument with us of the Sincerity of his Intentions: Beſides a prudent Nation ought never to refuſe the Services of any Man, tho' he had once been their Enemy. Camillus who was baniſhed by the Romans, for having maintained thro' a miſtaken Zeal the Intereſt of the Nobles, by whom he was baſely forſaken, being afterwards recalled from Exile, ſpent the Remainder of his honourable Life in Defence of the Liberties of the People.

Sejanus and Tigellinus have been abſurdly introduced on the Scene; two infamous Raſcals, who owed their Greatneſs to the Flattery they daily offered up to their Maſters, in whoſe Ears they continually buzzed unlimited Power. If we are to look for Parallels, we can only find them in the Courts of arbitrary Princes. Then perhaps it will appear, our No-Wits have drawn their own Characters, and impudently foiſted them on others.

Their blind Rage has betrayed them into other Blunders. They have baſely inſulted the Misfortunes incident to Humanity, than which nothing can be more baſe. Miſtaken Bl——ds! what you imagined to be Satir is real Panegyrick.—— A Man under the Frowns of Fate, ſtruggling with Difficulties, riſes by his proper Merit ſuperior to Misfortunes, and at laſt ſtands conſpicuous in the Eye of the Country!— Such Circumſtances are the trueſt Marks of intrinſick Worth.— The many eminent Services he has done the Province in general, the perſonal Obligations that bind many to him in particular, render a Vindication of this Nature unneceſſary.

To conclude, with a Word to our Antagoniſts: Since drawing of Characters is become ſo much the Faſhion, and that only groteſque Repreſentations will pleaſe your vitiated Taſte, we ſhall endeavour to gratify your Humour, and imitate your Example: We ſhall begin by dragging Hypocriſy out of her lurking Holes; we'll tear off her Maſk and expoſe her Deformity to the Face of the Sun. We will ſhow how under the Cloak of Religion ſhe preys on the Neceſſities of Mankind, and fattens on the Spoils of the Poor. This Character is ſo general, that it may ſometimes be applied to a Prince, or a Senator, a Counſellor, or a Plebeian. If you want hiſtorical Subjects, I have ſome very diverting at your Service: One of a certain ſtupid S——y of State, who being ordered to draw up the Powers of a private Envoy, furniſhed him with the Credentials of Ambaſſador extraordinary: Another of a Clerk of the Houſe of Commons, who being employed and paid to write for them, very honeſtly took their Money, and writ againſt them. Come on Gentlemen. Let us try our Talents; ſince it ſeems an innocent Diverſion. Let the Publick be Judge who has the moſt maſterly Pencil, that paints with boldeſt Strokes, or moſt animates his Figures.

N. B. I do not intend to attack, but ſtand on the defenſive, or, as the French Writer in the Mercury ſculpleſsly phraſes it, render back Chataſtrophes by Way of Reprizals.

Z.

Hezekiah happens to gueſs right, when he ſays, I borrow my Thoughts from other Authors; for in reality I have advanced nothing but what the moſt celebrated and moſt approved Writers, both ancient and modern, have frequently aſſerted. At the ſame time, I freely declare my Opinion, that Hezekiah is ſolely entitled to the Honour of the two Performances, publiſhed in the Merc. No. 855. as they evidently appear to be the natural Produce of his own Brain.

In a Letter to his Friend Andrew, he informs us, that he works hard all Day and ſmoaks his Pipe at Night, that he not only reads the News-Papers, but ſometimes other Books which he borrows, having none of his own, but an old Bible which was his Great-Grandfather's.

It would be doing him Injuſtice, to ſuppoſe that he either plundered Cicero or Plato for theſe Thoughts, or any other Author, except the incomparable News Writer, whom he ſo much admires; or that he is in the leaſt beholden to Ariſtotle, whom he ſagaciouſly concludes from the Premiſes, that no Man underſtands the Engliſh Language better than himſelf.

Notwithſtanding his boaſted Skill, he has palpably miſtaken the ludicrous

Indignity for the future. As nothing less was intended by my Remarks on the West India Vessel than what he would insinuate: his injurious Reflections on that Occasion, must appear inconsistent with the Duties of moral Life, which he also professes to understand.

But of all the Affronts I have received from Hezekiah under different Names, none has given me a more sensible Displeasure, than that he should presume to place me on a Level with himself in Regard to his French Compositions.

But why should I complain of his ill Usage to me, while his Ingratitude to his Printer cryes aloud for Vengeance, and drowns all other Complaints. He has advertised the whole Province, that the Publisher of the Mercury cannot print a few Lines without committing * numerous Errors. Every Body will easily observe, how this ungrateful Author inserted in English the Errata of a French Piece, that he might more effectually expose a Person, whose only Crime is a too easy Complaisance.

To convince the Publick how much I abhor such an ungenerous Behaviour, I take this Opportunity to declare, that two Errors in the Gazette, No. 388. viz. du instead of de before Grammaire, and a redundant vous before trompés, are not to be charged to the Printer's but to the Author's Account.

London, Feb. 14. The King of Sardinia has declared, in Form, his Acceptation of the Preliminaries signed at Vienna, with some Restrictions, but such as are not very essential.

We hear that on Tuesday last a certain House-keeper in Shoe-lane threw a female Child, about four Years old, into the Fire, and burnt the Fore-part of it in so horrible and cruel a manner, that its Life is despaired of. The dismal Outcries of the Child (being in great Torture) occasion'd several of the Neighbours to break open the Door, which preserved the Child from being entirely burnt to Ashes; and being asked the Reason of her committing such Barbarity, she had nothing to alledge in her Defence, but that it was a Nurse Child, and was so very ill-natured that she could not bear with it. By the Neglect of the People, she, not being immediately apprehended, has thought fit to abscond.

Feb. 21. The following is the Translation of the Answer which King Augustus III. sent to the Pope's Letter, presented by the Nuncio of his Holiness to his Majesty, in an Audience which that Minister had of him the 17th of January.

Most Holy Father,

"IN all our Actions, and particularly in our Acceptance of the Crown of Poland which was offered to us, the Glory of God, the Advancement of the Orthodox Religion, and the Happiness of the People committed to our Care, was our principal View: As to the Success of our other Affairs, we leave it to the Supream Mover of all things: The sincere Respect which we always had for you and the holy See, made us hope that we should one Time or other receive some Mark of your paternal Love; and it was with the utmost Concern that we saw our selves so long deprived of that Favour which we so earnestly coveted: We waited for it with Patience and a filial Resignation, till the Archbishop of Ionia, the Nuncio of your Holiness, having repaired to us at Warsaw, intirely satisfied in this Particular our Wishes and Desires; We were transported with Joy at the Receipt of the Letter which your Holiness made use of. Therefore we thought it our Duty to write to you likewise with our own Hand, as we now do, to thank you in a particular Manner for all the Favours which your Holiness conferred on us with so much Goodness, and which will encourage us to give you, upon all Occasions, Proofs of our filial Obedience towards your Holiness: We therefore with all our People, ask your Blessing; and we humbly kiss your Feet.

Given at Warsaw, Jan. 28. 1736.

AUGUSTUS, King of Poland.

Friday last Week the Coroner's Inquest sat at the Black Raven in Fetter-lane, on the Body of Mary Graves, an Infant of between two and three Years old, supposed to have been wilfully burnt to Death by one Mary Estwick, an elderly Woman, who had the Care of it, (and who lodged in a Court near the Raven) and brought in their Verdict, Accidental Death; it appeared, on Examination of several Witnesses, that Mary Estwick came home on Tuesday about two in the Afternoon, quite intoxicated with Gin, sat down before the Fire, and it is supposed had the Child in her Lap; which fell out of it on the Hearth, and the Fire caught hold of the Child's Cloaths and burnt it to Death. People heard the Child cry, and ran into Estwick's Room, and found the Child on the Hearth, burnt to Death, and the Fire catching hold of the old Woman, and had like to have burnt the Room. When the People that came in had put the Fire out, they attempted to rouze Estwick, but she was so intoxicated, she knew nothing of what had been done, or what they were about; though it appeared, that the Woman always used the Child with great Tenderness and Humanity at other Times, and never committed any Act of Cruelty; so that all was owing to that pernicious Liqour.

Feb. 28. The Lamb, Capt. Morgan, bound from Bristol to Waterford, was stranded last Monday Morning on Minehead Beach in Somersetshire. She had on board a considerable Number of Recruits (with their Wives and Children) for Capt. Frankford and Capt. Williamson's Companies, which first named Gentleman, with above Seventy Men, Women and Children were drowned; but about forty Persons, who got upon the Ship's Shrouds, were saved. The dead Bodies of most of the drowned Persons were taken up the same Day.

We have received Advice from Norfolk, that on Sunday Night the 15th Instant, a violent Storm arose at N. W. and happening to be a Spring-Tide, brought the Sea in a most terrible Manner upon the Shore; it overflowed the great Beach at Clay, and almost demolished that Town, (many of the Inhabitants of which were taken out of their Windows; overflowed the Marshes, and left nine Feet Water on them: The whole Coast almost from Clay to Lynn, was overflowed, and great Damage done.

BOSTON,

BOSTON, May 24.

The following Relation came lately in a Letter to the Hon. Col. David Dunbar, Esq; Lieut. Gov. &c. of New-Hampshire, from Mr. Mitchel at Annapolis Royal in Nova-Scotia, one of the Colonel's Deputy-Surveyors of the Woods.

Sir, I take this Occasion to relate to you a very odd Story, and as I myself am particularly concerned, I think it proper to give it you as follows.

On my Survey this Spring I arrived at the Harbour of the Pobomcoumps, the first Day of May, where I met with Mrs. Buckler, who related her Story to me as follows.

"That she left Dublin the 7th October last, with her Husband Mr. Andrew Buckler, of Ireland, bound for Annapolis in Maryland, in a Brigt. belonging to said Buckler, and that by their long Passage they were almost out of fresh Water, which obliged them to make the Land; and on the 16th of December arrived at Tiboge, a Harbour 2 Leagues to the Northward of the Tuscatt Islands, and sent the Boat ashore for fresh Water but could find none, which oblig'd 'em to melt Snow and Barrel it up for their use. That they sent their Servant Maid and Negroe Boy a shore to wash the Linnen they had used on Board in the Voyage, and on the 24th of December an Indian haled the Brigt. from the shoar, and wanted to come on board, but was answer'd by the Capt. that the Long Boat was ashore; and he would send for him when it was high Water. In the Evening the two Servants not coming on board as usual, they were called from on board with the Speaking Trumpet, but not coming, they concluded the Indian had destroy'd them, and stole the Boat; the loss of which confin'd the Ships Company on board upwards of two Months, in which time they had no fresh Water but what they saved when it Rain'd or Snow'd, which put 'em to great Inconveniencies, insomuch that many of the Sailors were oblig'd to mix Rum, Salt Water and Lime-juice for their common Drink, which Mrs. Buckler imagin'd was the cause of the Death of most of the Ships Company, which afterwards happen'd. The Capt. dying first, he was followed by many of the Company, that consisted of 18 Persons, which put Mr. Buckler on building a little Boat, that was finished before his Death, who died 30th March last. That on the 4th of April she was surprised by two Indian Men, one Indian Woman and several Children, who of their own accord came into the Cabin and demanded some Rum; Mrs. Buckler told them there was none in the Vessel, and begg'd of them that if they knew of any English or French Inhabitants thereabouts, they would acquaint them of their Misfortune, which they offer'd to do for payment, which she refused until their return; by accident there was a large Stone Bottle of Cherry Brandy in the Cabbin, which one of the Indians perceiving, tasted, found it agreable, and drank to the other Indians, which put them upon plundering the Vessel, and they carried Mrs. Buckler by force into their Canoe. There were two Men left alive on board when the Indians took Mrs. Buckler ashore; the Indians kept her in the Woods 4 Days without Covering, transporting her from Place to Place, and on the 5th Day they brought her to their Wigwams, where she continued 4 Days untill the French came and brought her from the Indians to their own Houses".
